Defining the Future of Reptile Care

WELCOME TO ZOO MED

Here at Zoo Med, animals are our passion, and for over 40 years we have made it our mission to supply the very best in exotic pet foods, reptile products, and reptile habitats. As a company made up of reptile hobbyists, we strive to provide the supplies and knowledge needed to successfully care for reptiles, amphibians, fish, insects and other exotic pets to keep them happy and healthy.

The reptile supplies, accessories, and tools we manufacture are first tested at our facilities on the large collection of reptiles & aquarium fish we house at Zoo Med. Many of us have desk pets, and many of those desks are wedged into places in-between the 200+ terrariums, aquariums, paludariums, and other habitats at our facility. Inside our Animal Room, we house over 90 species ranging from chameleons, geckos, skinks, frogs, fish, newts, tarantulas, and beetles. Outside in our Turtle Nirvana Greenhouse, we care for 30 species of turtles and tortoises, several of which are endangered.

Zoo Med's Customer Service Team is made up of specialized animal caretakers that personally take care of our incredible collection of pets. Our experienced staff provide customer service over the phone, by email and in-person at reptile shows with the knowledge needed to help your animal thrive.

We continually spread our knowledge of exotic pet care by working closely with Pets in the Classroom helping more than 15,000 students enjoy a classroom pet. Zoo Med also works closely with pet stores across the nation educating them on reptile care. Lastly, we partner with over 150 zoos nation wide helping with their conservation and preservation efforts.

Whether you are an experienced reptile breeder working with hundreds of animals, or you're looking into picking up your first pet bearded dragon, Zoo Med is here to help.

Since 2009, 1,500+ animals have been hatched at Zoo Med.

WHAT IS A PALUDARIUM?

Terrarium with a built in Aquarium!

CANOPY

Arboreal species hunt and rest among the tree tops.

LAND

Semi-aquatic animals spend their time along the water's edge.

WATER

Below the surface, fish and invertebrates make their home.

A Paludarium is half Terrarium and half Aquarium that mimics wildlife habitats found along the banks of rivers, streams and other sources of water. Many plants, reptiles, fish, invertebrates and amphibians call these areas home.

THERMOREGULATION

What is Thermoregulation?

The body temperature of most reptiles is influenced by the outside environmental temperature. This means that to control their body temperature, the animal must move to a warmer or cooler location. Your pet will innately look for these temperature differences so it is important to provide them with a thermal gradient within their terrarium.

Thermal Gradients

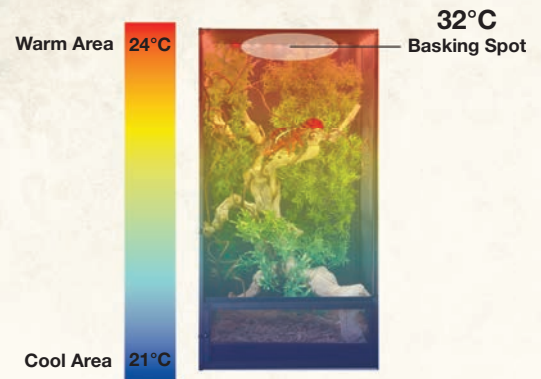

Providing a heat gradient within your enclosure allows your pet to thermoregulate by choosing what temperature it's most comfortable in. Your thermal gradient can be horizontal or vertical depending on your pet and their terrarium.

Measuring Temperature

Placing heat lamps and/or heat strips on one side of the terrarium will naturally create this gradient but don't guess the temperatures! Use a thermometer(s) to measure the temperature in each area of the enclosure.

Basking Spots

An important feature to remember when setting up a thermal gradient is the Basking Site. This designated area on the "warm side" of the habitat is generally the hottest area your pet can access. It should be a place that is easy for your pet to get to and a comfortable place to rest as many reptiles may spend a significant part of their day "basking" and soaking up the heat. Setting up a basking site can simply be done by placing a Basking Spot Lamp®, Halogen, Powersun®, or other reflector type lamp over one side of the habitat. For arboreal lizards, this should be over a comfortable perching branch; for aquatic turtles, place the lamp over a dock or land area; for tortoises, basking is usually done in an open, flat area in the habitat.

REPTICARE® CERAMIC HEAT EMITTER

HEAT: Heat bulbs help maintain optimum terrarium temperatures. Use low heat for temperate species, medium heat for tropical species & high heat for desert species.

Visible Daylight is important to establish a natural light cycle for the animal and should be used for 12-14 hours a day.

UVB is essential to the health of many reptiles and helps them maintain strong bones.

UVA helps reptiles to see accurately and can promote natural behaviors.

Basking bulbs provide a focused beam of heat which is essential for many reptile species.

Delivers less concentrated heat than a spot lamp, great for warming the upper canopy for arboreal reptiles.

A Splashproof bulb is ideal for an aquatic habitat where animals, such as turtles, may splash it.

UVB FOR REPTILES

What is UVB?

UVB is part of the sun's natural light spectrum. Most reptiles require exposure to UVB to produce vitamin D3, which is essential in order for them to use the calcium from their diet. The sun provides UVB in nature, however, in your home you will need to provide UVB by using specialty lighting designed for reptiles.

What is the UV Index (UVI)?

The UV Index (UVI) is a measure of UV radiation. In this Index, the wavelengths measured are those that contribute most to a reptile's ability to manufacture their own vitamin D3. This is important because not all UVB wavelengths are equal in their ability to promote vitamin D synthesis.

What are Ferguson Zones?

Dr. Ferguson, a renowned herpetologist and researcher, observed the daytime activities of many different reptile species and recorded the UV Index they were found in. Over time and with the contributions of many other dedicated researchers, these observations and recordings have been used to create the "Ferguson Zones" we use today.

What Zones Should My Animal Have?

Every habitat should provide a photo gradient with zones that go all the way down to 0 UVI, which allows animals to photo-regulate, or control their exposure to UVB. The upper zone limit should be based on your animal's unique natural basking behavior.

How to use these charts:

1. Determine what zone best describes your pet.
2. Consider the size of your enclosure. These measurements should be taken from the face of the lamp to the basking site.
3. Choose a lamp that can provide the correct zone at your pet's basking site.
4. Remember to make sure that there is a gradient of light all the way down to "0" UVI allowing your pet to retreat.
5. Keep in mind that some reflectors may increase a lamp's output and screens may reduce the UVB that reaches your pet. To know precise UVI, you can use a UV Index Meter (ST-7).

With a proper photoregulation setup, reptiles will have access to a variety of zones

Reptile Supplementation

Maintaining an adequately balanced diet can be challenging when providing multiple food items together, such as a mix of pellets, produce, and prey. It's important to know that not all greens provide the same vitamins and minerals as one another (the same can be said for vegetables, fruits, and invertebrates). Therefore, when providing a mixed diet, it's often necessary to provide a vitamin and mineral supplement in order to balance out the diet.

The most common micronutrients to be out-of-balance in a mixed diet are calcium, phosphorous, and vitamin D3. While there is no prescribed rule for which animals need additional D3, a little research and these general recommendations can help guide keepers in the right direction:

General Recommendations:

For more information on UVB, Vitamin D3 and calcium, please visit www.zoomed.eu

Recommended use With D3:

- Diurnal species housed indoors (Bearded Dragons, Chameleons, Turtles, Tortoises)
- Can be offered occasionally to nocturnal animals

Recommended use Without D3:

- Animals housed outdoors with direct exposure to sunlight for 10hrs/ day or more (i.e. Chameleons and Tortoises housed outdoors).
- Reptiles that eat whole vertebrate prey (eg. mice).

IMPORTANCE OF HUMIDITY

Humidity is the amount of water vapor or moisture in the air. For reptiles that are adapted to live in a particular part of the world, humidity plays a vital role in the health of the skin, eyes, respiratory tract and more. Humidity requirements vary greatly from species to species, which is why knowing your species requirements is essential.

Tropical Humidity - 60-90%

Generally, tropical species have a moderate to high humidity requirement because the humidity is naturally high in their native habitats. If kept at too low of a humidity level, tropical species may experience difficulty shedding, dry eyes, general dehydration, and respiratory problems. When maintaining tropical habitats with high humidity, it is also important to consider air flow and circulation. A tropical habitat that does not account for air circulation is more likely to have algae, mold, and mildew growth. To prevent this from happening in a terrarium, make sure that there is adequate air flow through the habitat, spot clean waste regularly, and turn over moist substrates to introduce oxygen to lower substrate levels. For animals that require very moist substrate or high humidity, there should also be areas available that are a little drier where animals can go to regulate and dry out if necessary. Constant exposure to wet conditions without an opportunity to dry out can lead to bacterial and fungal infections of the skin and respiratory tract.

Desert Humidity - BELOW 40%

Many desert species have a relatively low humidity level. Many desert species spend time underground, in burrows, or other areas that may be more moist than the general humidity of the habitat. To recreate this in a terrarium, micro-climates can be established giving pets a humid retreat similar to the underground homes and hides they have access to in the wild. These humid micro-climates or "humidity hides" can help desert species with shedding, proper shell growth (tortoises) and eye problems that can come with a very dry climate. Just as monitoring temperature is essential for setting up a thermal gradient in a reptile habitat, monitoring humidity levels is important for establishing proper humidity levels. Generally, humidity is higher closest to dampened substrate or items and is lowest near heat lamps. If using automatic humidity devices, it is a good idea to use them along with a controller.

AVIAN CALCIUM™

ITEM# A38-3E

- Ultrafine Precipitated Calcium Carbonate Supplement
- Zoo Med's AVIAN CALCIUM™ is a pure calcium supplement for all species of birds. We use only precipitated calcium carbonate which is white in color and is essentially lead free. Pure calcium carbonate is white, not gray. Impurities in other sources of calcium carbonate (e.g. Oyster Shell Calcium) cause the supplement to appear gray. The calcium carbonate particles in AVIAN CALCIUM™ have a unique shape, and an extremely high surface area per gram, resulting in increased calcium bioavailability. With AVIAN CALCIUM™, you can take comfort in knowing that your birds are getting a highly bioavailable source of calcium carbonate that is free of harmful impurities.
- Calcium is essential for the formation and maintenance of strong bones, egg production, blood clotting, and other vital life functions. As a general rule, calcium should make up one half to one percent of a bird's diet. Calcium should make up two percent of the diet of breeding hens which require additional calcium for the formation of egg shells.
